

LOCAL NEWS.

Brian O'Leary is a deputy Sheriff of Yavapai county.

Charley Driscoll will leave for the Quintoos to-morrow morning.

Deputy U. S. Marshal H. D. Underwood is now in Phoenix.

District Attorney Ben Hereford has gone to Wilcox.

Dr. J. C. Handy's little son Charlie, is reported to be dangerously ill.

Duck hunting on the Santa Cruz is still the popular maternal sport.

T. D. Raymond and Harry Brook left yesterday for the Mammoth mine.

The Palace hotel is offered for rent for the January 1st. See advertisement.

The Club saloon had luncheon is patronized very liberally about noon.

T. A. Judd expects to make a business visit to San Francisco in a few days.

There were no documents filed for record with the County Recorder to-day.

R. Rawlin has moved his Congress store to the Grand Central hotel.

It is generally believed that the apple eaten by Adam and Eve was a papaya.

Deputy Sheriff Appel kindly furnished the list of arrests published in yesterday's Citizen.

The new restaurant at the American hotel enjoys a handsome run.

Jack Barnes was banqueting and regaled and treated with great distinction in Tombstone.

An esteemed correspondent wants to know how the little baby bee and why he doth it. He has no idea.

The native owners are very busy doing their annual assessment work now, and the mountains are full of people.

Messrs. Flood and Mackay were to leave San Francisco on Saturday for a tour to Arizona and points further east.

There will be vocal and instrumental music and recitations at the Pink Tea, at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Leut. L. H. Strother, first Infantry, has been assigned to duty at San Carlos, with Capt. F. E. Pierce, Indian agent.

The Phoenix Gazette thinks Thanksgiving ought to be particularly observed by the poor and earnest, given that the Legislature does not meet.

Shillider had a fine specimen of mountain sheep on exhibition at his market to-day. He keeps his patron with him with game in addition to other meats.

A herd of antelope in the San Simon valley, a few days ago, stood a short distance from the railroad track and seemed to be waiting for a train to pass. There were ten or twelve in the herd.

It is believed that the Washington office of the government assumes the right to furnish the judges of the Arizona court with the names of persons to whom they may associate with, but how they shall decide important questions.—Santa Fe New Mexican.

The friends of C. M. Strane, although they have received, have not yet expressed a belief that he is getting better. Had it been otherwise they would have heard it. His friends hope to learn of his speedy recovery.

The grandmother has been good to the old man, and has sent him a full box of holiday goods. He has the best time for table use and any merriment that the year without a doubt, the quantity of his wine and brandy, and the fact that the Colonel has proclaimed his warm dam, and the country is in the best of the.

A box of conqueror cigars upon the dinner table, bearing the compliments of S. H. Drachman, leaves no doubt in his mind that the trials and temptations of human life are not so great as to make a weary pilgrim that consolation and peace of mind the world can neither give nor take away.

Robert J. Barthels, of Tucson, who has been quite successful in that city as a restaurateur, has made arrangements for taking charge of the restaurant to the rear of the Germania beer hall, and intends to make a first class place out of it. Mr. Barthels will employ white cooks, white waiters and other help, giving our people an opportunity of supporting their own race. He left on Monday for Tucson, and expects to return in a few days to inaugurate his enterprise.—Phoenix Gazette.

The American Bookmaker, published by Howard Lockwood, 129 and 131 Duane street, New York, is a journal of technical information for publishers, printers, lithographers, bookmakers, blank book manufacturers and all persons interested in bookmaking. It is not only replete with interesting details, but is illustrated with some of the most beautiful and colored. It is printed in the highest style and is carefully read by everyone interested in bookmaking.

Passenger brakeman Davis on the Santa Fe, who came up from the south last evening, saw the dead bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Yeater, who were killed by the Apache, and says that the mutilation of Mrs. Yeater's body was horrible. He says that it is generally believed that the bodies of the men were not only replete with interesting details, but is illustrated with some of the most beautiful and colored. It is printed in the highest style and is carefully read by everyone interested in bookmaking.

While en route from St. John to Springfield last week, Mr. St. John and his wife, Mrs. L. E. Leach, suddenly met seven men, watering at a pool along the river. It is needless to say that they gave them a wide berth; but the strange part of the matter is, that the men were by Mr. St. John, who became badly frightened and almost unmanageable upon seeing the men. He was found the next day to have been in color from a jet black to that of a milky white. This he is sent in place of the serpent, now driven into winter quarters.—St. John Herald.

Last Friday night the last shot in the shaft of the Locomotive mine at Quintoos, threw out a large quantity of heavy native silver. It is quite malevolent and is easily cut with a knife. Just how much of this kind of ore is found was not learned at the time. Saturday's stage left left, but it was rumored in Quintoos that a large quantity of silver was also found. It is needless to say that the development of an extensive body of high grade ore in the lower part of the Mammoth mine, the property of William Schmidt, the Quintoos camp is rapidly coming to the front and its ultimate prosperity is now secured.

St. Jeffords, clerk of the District Court, left by last night's delayed train for his home in Mississippi, to attend to some business matters and pay a visit to his friends and kindred, after which he will return to Arizona and probably become a permanent resident.

St. Jeffords has appointed Frank H. Hereford his deputy and Judge Barnes reports his successor and the position will probably pass into other hands during Mr. Jeffords' absence. The new clerk has made a great many friends in this city and is a gentleman and an official he possesses the esteem of all. The Citizens wishes him a pleasant visit and safe return to the land of perennial sunshine.

The Sierra Madre.

According to information derived from Sam Brannan, the people of this country possess an enormous quantity of Sierra Madre mountains of Mexico. He says they are not mountains in the sense derived from a knowledge of the great chains of mountains in the United States, although they are equally or even more inaccessible. He says that, upon ascending the precipitous peaks and gaining the summit, one will readily observe that the mountain tops are generally a level plateau or mesa, and as far as the eye can discern, objects on the tops are perfectly level along the entire chain. This is not noticed until the extreme top is reached. There are, however, great chains of mountains, the heights made by the attraction of water under eternal ages upon the looser particles of earthy matter and abraded rocks, which, in the case of the Sierra Madre, the mountain range still in place, reaching up its lofty summit line over six thousand feet above the sea level. The mountains are washed gradually away until the one high plateau is now but a chain of low mountains that almost defy the imagination. The forest of trees and shrubs within the great cañons and openings, and streams of water rush forth at intervals, the sound of the great sea of the time when the water of the great sea washed across the gradually rising ground, once the level of the sea was reached. The sea was a level plateau of Mexico. The sea was a level plateau of Mexico. The sea was a level plateau of Mexico.

Later on the programme of entertainment was given by Mrs. E. A. Black, which was followed by a Scotch recitation by Earl Webb, who made a most favorable impression as an elocutionist. Then came a trio—"Life Hath no Power"—by Miss M. Moroney, Mrs. Herbert Row and M. H. Penney. The trio was very charming piece of music and was excellently rendered. Mrs. B. M. Jacobs then gave one of her beautiful songs. In response to an enthusiastic encore she sang "Il Bacio" with equally good effect.

Refreshments were then announced and pink tea was served in the ladies' parlor, during which time Mr. A. V. Grossetta gave a clarinet solo, "Nearer My God, to Thee," with variations, accompanied by Mrs. Grossetta on the organ. All the vocal selections were accompanied by Mrs. A. Jones, whose skill and proficiency on the piano and organ has often been a subject of the warmest commendation in local circles.

At the special and urgent request of the party, Mr. Earl Webb gave another recitation, and did so exceedingly well that his talents will be in demand at almost every entertainment of a like nature. All those who contributed to the musical and literary programme deserve a great deal of praise for their meritorious contributions to the general enjoyment of the occasion.

In a financial sense the affair was quite satisfactory—about sixty dollars having been received for the entertainment. All those who contributed to the musical and literary programme deserve a great deal of praise for their meritorious contributions to the general enjoyment of the occasion.

This morning I. Y. Foster, a former resident of Yavapai county, saddled his horse at Silver City, New Mexico, and proceeded on his way to Silver City, New Mexico. Mr. Foster's riding horse is a trim looking roan animal, which appears capable of making a fine race of the story he tells as possessed of a sagacity akin to human understanding. Some time since Mr. Foster was proceeding on his way to Silver City, New Mexico, and was attacked by a mountain fever. He was alone, and fearing that he would be unable to reach his destination, he was attacked by a mountain fever. He was alone, and fearing that he would be unable to reach his destination, he was attacked by a mountain fever.

For several days thereafter Mr. Foster suffered from a mountain fever, and was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

Pink Tea.

The Pink Tea Congregational given by the ladies at the Congregational church last night was a very pleasant and successful affair, both financially and in its social features. A large number of people gathered at the church at the designated hour and for awhile conversation and exchange of greetings were carried on. The ladies of the committee all wore a pink T on their dresses, and a dozen young ladies were the pink caps and trimmings. The globes of the lamps were shaded with pink and the ladies' cheeks were naturally of that agreeable tint.

Later on the programme of entertainment was given by Mrs. E. A. Black, which was followed by a Scotch recitation by Earl Webb, who made a most favorable impression as an elocutionist. Then came a trio—"Life Hath no Power"—by Miss M. Moroney, Mrs. Herbert Row and M. H. Penney. The trio was very charming piece of music and was excellently rendered. Mrs. B. M. Jacobs then gave one of her beautiful songs. In response to an enthusiastic encore she sang "Il Bacio" with equally good effect.

Refreshments were then announced and pink tea was served in the ladies' parlor, during which time Mr. A. V. Grossetta gave a clarinet solo, "Nearer My God, to Thee," with variations, accompanied by Mrs. Grossetta on the organ. All the vocal selections were accompanied by Mrs. A. Jones, whose skill and proficiency on the piano and organ has often been a subject of the warmest commendation in local circles.

At the special and urgent request of the party, Mr. Earl Webb gave another recitation, and did so exceedingly well that his talents will be in demand at almost every entertainment of a like nature. All those who contributed to the musical and literary programme deserve a great deal of praise for their meritorious contributions to the general enjoyment of the occasion.

In a financial sense the affair was quite satisfactory—about sixty dollars having been received for the entertainment. All those who contributed to the musical and literary programme deserve a great deal of praise for their meritorious contributions to the general enjoyment of the occasion.

This morning I. Y. Foster, a former resident of Yavapai county, saddled his horse at Silver City, New Mexico, and proceeded on his way to Silver City, New Mexico. Mr. Foster's riding horse is a trim looking roan animal, which appears capable of making a fine race of the story he tells as possessed of a sagacity akin to human understanding. Some time since Mr. Foster was proceeding on his way to Silver City, New Mexico, and was attacked by a mountain fever. He was alone, and fearing that he would be unable to reach his destination, he was attacked by a mountain fever. He was alone, and fearing that he would be unable to reach his destination, he was attacked by a mountain fever.

For several days thereafter Mr. Foster suffered from a mountain fever, and was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear, and his owner presumed in search of food. On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs.

On the third day the horse was found in an appearance at the camp, followed by another prospector, who kindly answered to Mr. Foster's wants and needs. He was unable to move, or to provide himself with any sustenance. The horse would come to his blankets, two or three times a day, and he would turn around and stare at the spot. But at times the faithful horse would disappear